From C.G. Jung: Answer to Job.

(loaned by Joan Crichton Aug 1960)

Vertallian: These testimonies of the soul are as simple as they are true, as obvious as they are simple, as common as they are obvious, as natural as they are common, as divine as they are natural.

I think that they cannot appear to any one to be trifling and ridiculous if he considers the mystery of Nature whence the authority of the soul is derived.

What you allow to the mistress you will assign to the disciple.

Nature is the mistress, the soul is the disciple. What the one has taught or the other has learned has been delivered to them by God, who is, in truth, the Master even of the mistress herself. What notion the soul is able to conceive of her first teacher is in your power to judge from that soul which is in you. Feel that which causes you to feel; think upon that which is in foreboding your prophet; in omens, your augur; in the events which befall you, your foreseer.

Strange if, being given by God, she knows how to act
the diviner for men!
Equally strange if she knows Him by whom she has been given.
