THE four institutions who have jointly arranged this exhibition wish to express their sincere appreciation for the co-operation they have received in its preparation.

First they wish to thank all those institutions and individuals who, by lending their paintings for so long a period, have made it possible for the exhibition to be seen intact in all four cities.

Secondly, all those whose interest, knowledge and advice have proved so valuable in its planning and arrangement, and in the search for pictures, for information on individual paintings, and for material on painters and the conditions under which they worked. Their help has brought together a fund of knowledge which will prove of considerable value in the future to those who continue to study the subject to which this exhibition is an introduction.

Thirdly, Mrs. Grace Pincoe and Miss Barbara Swann, who have been responsible for the bibliography and general co-ordination of research materials.

R E M E R C I E M E N T S

La direction de chacune des quatre institutions qui ont préparé la présente exposition, désire exprimer sa reconnaissance très sincère, d'abord aux personnes et aux institutions qui, en prêtant leurs œuvres pour une longue période, ont permis que la collection puisse être montrée intégralement dans chacune des quatre villes qu'elles représentent; ensuite, à tous ceux dont l'intérêt, le savoir, ou les conseils ont été d'un si grand secours, soit dans le montage et l'agencement, soit dans la recherche des peintures, soit au sujet des artistes et des conditions dans lesquelles ils travaillaient. Leur concours a permis de recueillir de nombreux renseignements qui seront très précieux pour ceux qui, plus tard, voudront continuer l'étude du sujet dont cette présentation n'est que le prélude.

Enfin, à Mrs. Grace Pincoe et à Miss Barbara Swann qui, dans la mise au point de la bibliographie et le travail de recherche, ont été de la plus grande utilité.

INTRODUCTION

SINCE shortly after Confederation, artists' organizations have continued uninterruptedly to present to the Canadian public each year, a series of exhibitions of contemporary painting. So far, however, no considerable effort has been made to present in review to Canadians the development of painting in Canada as a continuous process, from its beginning in the seventeenth century to the present day. This is the purpose of the exhibition.

Admittedly an exhibition such as this must be compact and carefully selected in order to keep it within reasonable bounds of space. The co-operating institutions, therefore, feel that some explanation should be given as to its organization.

For the early periods, the problem was not so much to select as to discover the material. As it came to light, it was found that there were several distinct groupings, each with strong and generally consistent characteristics.

However, the situation changed with the foundation of the Ontario Society of Artists, the Royal Canadian Academy, and other societies, for their unbroken range of catalogues and reports presents a wealth of material to draw from. The approach from that time forward had to be, of necessity, highly selective. As the difficulty of tracing paintings in private hands still remained, it was decided, other things being equal, to use paintings from public collections with a view to discovering to what extent these collections covered the period.

About 1880 painting in Canada began to display an ever increasing diversity of style, stimulated by a great variety of influences. It has been the intention throughout to illustrate this variety by balanced groups of the work of representative painters, rather than by the work of any one man, except where his own stylistic development has covered a wide range and has been particularly

DEPUIS la Confédération, des groupements d'artistes n'ont cessé de montrer chaque année à notre public, une série d'expositions de la peinture contemporaine. Toutefois, aucune tentative n'a été faite jusqu'à nos jours pour présenter en rétrospective, le développement de la peinture au pays dans une parfaite continuité, depuis ses débuts au XVII^e siècle jusqu'à nos jours.

Evidemment, le problème de l'espace qui se pose tout d'abord, oblige à faire un choix très restreint dans la sélection des pièces. Le comité chargé de ce choix croit donc utile d'expliquer certains principes de l'organisation:

En ce qui concerne les époques les plus reculées, il s'agit plutôt d'un problème de recherches que de sélection. Les œuvres se placent ici dans plusieurs groupes distincts, offrant chacun des caractéristiques logiques et fortes.

D'autre part, l'aspect change bientôt avec la fondation de l'Ontario Society of Artists et de la Royal Canadian Academy ainsi que de certains autres groupements; et là commence une série ininterrompue de rapports annuels et de catalogues d'exposition offrant une source si riche de matières que le choix des pièces devient bien délicat. Comme il est très difficile de retracer parfois les peintures qui sont en collections particulières, il fut décidé, à valeur égale naturellement, de puiser dans les collections publiques, ce qui permet de juger jusqu'à quel point les collections de nos grands musées sont vraiment représentatives de chaque époque.

Vers 1880 la conception de l'art pictural au Canada varie beaucoup et se développe diversement. Le but de l'exposition est donc d'illustrer ces variations en groupant les travaux des peintres des diverses époques, plutôt que de présenter l'œuvre d'un même auteur dans son évolution; exception faite toutefois pour le cas d'un artiste dont l'œuvre, dans son développement, exerce une influence prépondérante au pays, tant par sa conception que par influential. With this in mind, it seemed sensible to adopt the general principle of showing the work of each artist at the period when he first established his mature style. This, however, has not always been possible, since pictures by many contemporary artists painted before the last war have been difficult to find.

This exhibition which was initiated by the Art Gallery of Toronto, is a first attempt at a complete survey in this country, and its organizers realize its possible shortcomings. Nevertheless, they feel that a beginning should be made and they present the exhibition in the hope that serious study and research will result. Much interest will be found in tracing the contributions of the two great European traditions which are dominant in Canada, contributions which are at times distinct but more often merged to their mutual enrichment.

The notes following in the catalogue are for the purpose of suggesting the general climate of ideas and trends in which the painters worked. But this exhibition would not be worth doing if it were not based on the idea of the painter as a creative and interpretative individual, rather than as a mere assimilator swayed by every wind that blows. Each painter has his individual integrity and he draws from the world around him everything that can be of use to him—interests, methods and ideals.

son étendue. Ceci admis, il semble logique d'établir en principe que l'on doit présenter l'oeuvre d'un artiste à l'époque de sa pleine maturité, chose impossible parfois, puisque bien des œuvres d'avant la guerre de 1914 restent apparemment introuvables.

Cette exposition, due à l'initiative de l'Art Gallery of Toronto, constitue un premier effort en ce pays, et ses initiateurs réalisent pleinement toutes ses imperfections. Néanmoins, ils soutiennent également qu'une première tentative devait se faire et l'exposition est présentée avec l'espoir que des études et des recherches sérieuses en résulteront. Il est très intéressant de retracer l'influence des deux grandes traditions qui dominent la peinture au Canada, influences parfois bien distinctes, mais qui souvent se confondent et s'unissent pour s'enrichir mutuellement.

On trouvera dans les notes suivantes du catalogue, les idées et les tendances générales qui recréent l'ambiance dans laquelle les artistes évoluaient. Mais cette exposition ne se justifierait même pas si l'idée primordiale ne s'imposait pas d'abord que l'artiste, esprit créateur et interprète, n'est pas un simple assimilateur, jouet de tous les caprices et de toutes les fantaisies. Le peintre dans son intégrité individuelle, puise dans l'atmosphère qui l'entoure, l'idéal, la méthode et les sujets qui peuvent l'inspirer.

IN the second half of the seventeenth century, while the French settlement was striking its first firm roots into the new soil, the style of Louis XIV was at its height in France where Church and State welcomed it as the perfect expression of their faith and ideals. The seventeenth century style came to Canada with the first bishops and governors, for New France did her best to emulate everything that was in vogue at home. Thus the colony recruited builders and craftsmen of all sorts from France for the purpose of setting up as soon as possible the ordered fabric of civilization in the New World. The Church imported painters and sculptors and established its own School of Arts and Crafts in order to transplant the French style to America. The School of St. Joachim at Cap Tourmente was established by François Montmorency de Laval, first Bishop of Quebec, about 1668.

Early artists were of several kinds. The professionals, including some painters and more sculptors, were quite conversant with the French manner. The amateurs, often priests or nuns with a nodding acquaintance with European styles, spent their spare time on art, while the local craftsmen lacked formal art training and familiarity with accomplished techniques.

Yet all "artists" were servants of the Church and enjoyed a station in society in keeping with their rank as craftsmen. For, unlike the Puritans of New England who barely tolerated the painting of portraits, the churchmen in New France realized to the full the psychological value of colourful pictures in teaching and preaching. Thus it was natural that, although there were no restrictions on the types of picture allowed, the subject matter of most Canadian paintings should fall into the categories of religious painting and portraiture. A few canvases may be termed allegorical or historical, but they usually have a religious connotation. Bridging the two main types was the votive picture, a combination portrait and religious picture important in early Canadian art. A few examples were executed in the full Baroque manner by amateurs or professional painters, but the majority, though none the less sincere, give every appearance of having been the work of the folk-artist whose knowledge of the courtly art of Europe was of the scantiest.

NOTE—The attributions of the paintings in this section are the result of the exhaustive research of M. Gérard Morisset, Directeur de l'inventaire des œuvres d'art de la province de Québec, who has devoted many years to this subject.

AU cours de la dernière partie du XVII^e siècle, alors que la vieille France enfonce profondément ses racines dans le sol de la Nouvelle-France, le style Louis XIV prédomine en France où l'Eglise et l'Etat le considèrent comme l'expression artistique de leur foi et de leur idéal. Ce style s'implante donc au Canada dès l'arrivée des premiers gouverneurs et des premiers évêques, alors que la colonie copie de son mieux tout ce qui est en vogue dans la Mère-Patrie. Des artisans de tous genres, constructeurs, architectes, sont amenés au pays afin de participer convenablement et le plus tôt possible à la civilisation du Nouveau-Monde. L'Eglise pour sa part, fait venir des peintres et des sculpteurs, et établit sa propre maîtrise d'art afin de transplanter et de propager l'art français au Canada. Ainsi, l'Ecole de Saint-Joachim, près du Cap Tourmente, est fondée en 1668 par Monseigneur de Laval, premier évêque de Québec.

On rencontre des artistes de toutes sortes. Les professionnels peu nombreux sont les peintres et les sculpteurs de formation française. Les amateurs sont souvent des prêtres et des religieuses, plus ou moins familiers avec l'art européen; pour se distraire ils s'amusent à travailler avec des artisans du lieu, mais ils ne possèdent pas toujours la technique de leur art.

Toutefois, ces "artistes" sont des serviteurs de l'Eglise et jouissent dans la société d'une place digne de leur rang. Car, à l'encontre des Puritains de la Nouvelle-Angleterre, qui tolèrent à peine le portrait, l'Eglise de la Nouvelle-France reconnaît pleinement la valeur psychologique de l'image en couleurs soit dans le sermon ou dans l'enseignement. Il est donc parfaitement naturel que la peinture canadienne de ce temps soit plutôt l'oeuvre de piété ou le portrait, bien qu'aucune restriction n'ait été imposée à ce sujet.

Quelques toiles représentent des sujets allégoriques ou historiques, mais en général l'idée pieuse s'y retrouve. On rencontre aussi, l'ex-voto, qui associe le portrait à l'oeuvre de piété, et qui occupe une place importante dans la peinture primitive canadienne. Quelques pièces, œuvres d'amateurs, ou même de professionnels, sont entièrement de style académique, mais le plus grand nombre, toutes aussi sincères, indiquent l'oeuvre de l'artisan du crû, très éloigné de toute influence européenne.

NOTE:—L'attribution des peintures de ce groupe est le résultat des recherches minutieuses de M. Gérard Morisset, directeur de l'Inventaire des œuvres d'art de la province de Québec, qui y a consacré de nombreuses années.

Sec. I—1

The paintings by Frère Luc are hardly to be distinguished from those of the same period which decorated the Churches of provincial France. They display the same exuberance of composition with the same dramatic use of light and shade, and they took their place in the same kind of architecture. The young colony was intended in very truth to be what it was named—New France.

Les peintures du Frère Luc se différencient à peine de celles de la même époque qui ornent les églises de France. La même ampleur de composition s'y déploie avec le même sens dramatique des jeux d'ombres et de lumières, et elles sont exposées dans des édifices de même style. La jeune colonie devenait véritablement une Nouvelle-France.

Sec. I—2

While paintings of traditional religious subjects could be copied from prints of European originals, pictures commemorating local events and portraits of local persons could not.

The craftsmen, some of them trained at the school of St. Joachim, tended to discard the academic style. Being as a rule so intimately concerned with subject matter, they produced paintings that were primitive in their flatness, angularity and simplicity of composition.

Alors que les sujets de l'oeuvre de piété pouvaient se copier d'originaux européens, le portrait d'un personnage ou la peinture descriptive d'un événement local ne pouvaient se copier.

Les artistes, formés dans certains cas à la maîtrise de Saint-Joachim, tendent à s'éloigner du style académique.

Ils s'appliquent tellement à la matière même du sujet qu'ils produisent des œuvres primitives par la simplicité de la composition, l'angularité et la raideur des plans.

Sec. I—3

Toward the close of the eighteenth and in the early nineteenth centuries, the demand for religious and state portraiture increased. The training of the painters who met it varied; some seem to have had no formal training. Others definitely show the direct influence of such French masters as Fragonard. Beaucourt, for example, who went to France in 1772, was one of the first to re-establish contact with European art after a period of isolation.

Vers la fin du XVIII^e siècle, et au début du XIX^e, le portrait officiel et l'œuvre de piété sont plus en demande; la formation des artistes qui doivent y répondre varie; d'aucuns semblent n'avoir reçu aucune formation particulière; d'autres subissent clairement l'influence directe de certains maîtres français tel que Fragonard. Beaucourt, par exemple, qui passe en France en 1772, fut l'un des premiers à reprendre le contact avec l'art européen après une certaine période d'isolement.

DURING the years immediately following 1760, while French-Canadians continued their own way of life, a new factor was introduced. The British garrison, vanguard of the English-speaking settlement, served to inform the British public of the new country. Among the officers were a number of trained draughtsmen and a few amateurs. After the soldier-artists came professional illustrators who travelled through the colony recording its settlements and topography.

At the outset, this sort of painting naturally centres around subjects of timely interest, but as time went on its scope widened to include the whole of Canada and the life of all her people.

These painters viewed the Canadian scene through British spectacles, since they were for the most part transients working to satisfy a demand in England, or for their own pleasure.

UN nouveau facteur se manifeste après 1760, alors que les Canadiens s'essayent à vivre du mieux possible et de leur propre manière. La garnison anglaise, avant-garde du colon anglais, comprend parfois des dessinateurs de carrière ou des amateurs. À la suite des soldats-artistes, viennent les illustrateurs de profession qui voyagent partout dans la colonie, reproduisant la topographie du pays, et ses habitations.

Cette peinture, documentaire au début, évolue progressivement vers l'illustration de l'étendue du pays et du mode de vie de ses habitants.

Naturellement ces artistes regardent et voient avec leurs yeux d'Anglais, puisqu'ils ne font que passer, et ils ne peignent que pour leurs clients d'Angleterre ou pour leur propre plaisir.

Sec. II—1

Although there was a diversity of style and talent amongst these painters, their main intention was descriptive. Most topographical pictures were watercolour drawings with mannerisms stemming from British landscape painting.

En dépit de variations fort naturelles de talent et de style, cette peinture est toute descriptive. De l'aquarelle topographique pour la plupart et qui s'inspire de la manière paysagiste anglaise.

Here is evidence of the use of somewhat more imagination both in choice of subject and in handling. Warre, for example, emphasizes the distance and mystery of the mountains and Bartlett transforms a city square by choosing an unusual event and romanticizing its setting. Throughout is the added interest of anecdote to enliven the scene.

Ici l'imagination se manifeste davantage dans le traitement et le choix du sujet. Ainsi, Warre accentue l'éloignement et le mystérieux des montagnes, tandis que Bartlett transforme la place publique quand il dramatise un événement remarquable. Et partout se retrouve l'intérêt d'une anecdote que l'on raconte pour enjoliver la scène.

EARLY in the nineteenth century a number of painters migrated to Canada, many for reasons unconnected with art. Though some of them eventually returned to Europe, others remained to practise their art in response to what local demand there was. They were joined by several Canadians who returned to their native country after studying abroad.

A demand for art had long existed in Quebec, but its appearance in the Maritime Provinces and in Upper Canada was an indication of the growing numbers, prosperity and ambition of the people who flocked to Canada following the American Revolution and the Napoleonic Wars.

AU début du XIX^e siècle, des peintres d'outre-mer viennent au Canada pour diverses raisons ne se rapportant pas toujours à leur art. D'aucuns retournent en Europe éventuellement, mais d'autres se mettent à la pratique de leur art pour répondre à la demande locale. Et plusieurs Canadiens se joignent à eux à leur retour d'un voyage d'études à l'étranger.

L'encouragement aux arts existe dans le Québec, et depuis longtemps; mais l'avènement de ce patronage dans les Provinces Maritimes et le Haut-Canada, souligne l'accroissement, l'ambition et la prospérité des habitants qui viennent en grand nombre s'y établir après la révolution américaine et les guerres de Napoléon.

Sec. III—I

Portrait painters, possessing varying degrees of training and skill, employed the neo-classic style of the early nineteenth century, inherited from Europe. The figures are clearly defined and consciously posed, with a stress on the dignity and social position of the sitter.

Les portraitistes, avec plus ou moins d'entrainement et d'habileté, travaillent dans le style néo-classique du début du XIX^e siècle, importé d'Europe. On accentue le rang social et la dignité du modèle; la figure posée consciencieusement est clairement définie.

These continued to paint the Canadian scene within the limitations of the traditions of British landscape painting in which they had been trained.

Fidèles à leur formation, ces artistes continuent à peindre le paysage canadien dans les limites de la manière traditionnelle du paysagiste anglais.

Here the accent is more decidedly European. Jacobi acquired in Germany his interest in meticulous detail. Kane's work shows the influence of his studies in the galleries of Europe, and Krieghoff's gaily coloured and animated scenes are characteristic of the Düsseldorf School and Dutch genre painting.

Ici la manière européenne s'accentue encore. Jacobi puise en Allemagne son souci du détail méticuleux. Kane subit l'influence de ses études dans les galeries d'Europe, et Krieghoff, dans sa peinture au coloris joyeux et dans ses scènes vivantes, offre toutes les caractéristiques de l'Ecole de Düsseldorf et de la peinture de genre hollandaise.

IV

BY the time of Confederation, eastern Canada was a thriving, bustling country, with much of its best arable land occupied and its cities well built and constantly growing. Fortunes made in Canada were being kept in the country; more and more of the apparatus of urban civilization was being installed as the frontier was pushed north and west. Here was a growing country, self-consciously proud of what it had already achieved and on the threshold of still greater accomplishment.

To the painters already settled here was added a stream of newcomers, chiefly from Great Britain, who found employment in various branches of their profession. Their increasing numbers and the spirit of the times led them to form, first in 1872, the Ontario Society of Artists, and in 1880, at the suggestion of the Marquis of Lorne, Governor-General of Canada and the Princess Louise, the Royal Canadian Academy. These professional societies in their charters express their concern and interest in education and in the public welfare. Their chief instrument was the annual exhibition, and their catalogues provide a continuous, contemporary record of painting in Canada. These societies also conducted art schools which trained a new generation of native-born painters.

It was not long before many of these painters began to go to Europe, mainly to France, or the United States to complete their education. It was inevitable that, when they returned, they brought with them current European styles to augment or rival the prevailing British influences. The period also saw the foundation of a number of institutions whose purpose was to foster public interest. The Montreal Society of Artists (1847), now the Art Association of Montreal, was a pioneer.

A la Confédération, les provinces de l'Est, actives, industrieuses, avec une bonne partie de leur terre arable habitée et cultivée, nous montrent des cités croissantes et bien bâties. Des fortunes ont été faites et gardées au pays où l'on voit l'apparât d'une civilisation urbaine, bien établie, et qui repousse de plus en plus ses frontières du nord et de l'ouest. Voici donc un jeune pays, au développement viril, fier à juste titre de ses accomplissements passés, et qui regarde l'avenir avec confiance.

Aux peintres déjà établis viennent se joindre d'autres artistes, venus de la Grande-Bretagne pour la plupart, et qui s'emploient dans les diverses branches de leur profession.

L'esprit des temps, et leur nombre grandissant les incitent à former en 1872 d'abord, l'Ontario Society of Artists, puis en 1880, à la suggestion du Marquis de Lorne, gouverneur-général du Canada et de S.A.R. la Princesse Louise, la Royal Canadian Academy. Dans leur charte, ces sociétés professionnelles manifestent l'intérêt et le souci qu'elles portent à l'éducation et au bien public, et leur principal mode d'expression se trouve dans l'exposition annuelle. Les catalogues de ces collections constituent une précieuse documentation de la peinture contemporaine au Canada. Ces sociétés fondent des écoles d'art qui forment une nouvelle génération d'artistes du pays, et bientôt nos peintres canadiens s'en vont en Europe, principalement en France, ou aux Etats-Unis, parfaire leur éducation artistique. Inévitabillement, ils en reviennent avec une conception de la peinture influencée par l'académisme international qui rivalise avec l'influence britannique prédominante. Cette époque voit aussi la fondation d'autres institutions formées pour promouvoir l'intérêt public. La Montreal Society of Artists (1847) devenue plus tard l'Art Association of Montreal, en est la pionnière.

Sec. IV—1

In this group is illustrated one general characteristic of mid-nineteenth century painting in Europe and America—naturalism. In particular the painters follow the manner of the popular British painting of the time.

Ce groupe montre clairement la caractéristique générale de la peinture en Europe et en Amérique au milieu du XIX^e siècle: le paysagisme méticuleux. Et les peintres s'inspirent particulièrement de la manière anglaise, alors si populaire.

The paintings of this group illustrate the influx of new European influences. The display of French painting at the Philadelphia Exposition of 1876 made our painters aware of Europe and the opportunities she offered for further training. The landscapes of the Barbizon School in France, the Dutch treatment of genre, as well as the contemporary British school of portraiture, became the fashion of the day. Walker, for instance, was known as the "Canadian Millet." So much did Europe dominate Canadian painting that one English critic reporting on the Canadian section of the Colonial and Indian Exhibition in London (1886) pointedly commented: "I should like to see Canadian art Canadian to the backbone."

Voici que se rencontrent les nouvelles influences européennes. La collection de peinture française à l'Exposition de Philadelphie en 1876, attire l'attention de nos artistes sur les opportunités qui s'offrent en Europe pour la poursuite de leurs études. Les paysages dans le genre de l'Ecole de Barbizon, en France, la peinture de genre hollandaise et l'école contemporaine anglaise du portrait sont en grande vogue. On appelle Walker, par exemple, le "Millet Canadien". L'influence européenne domine tellement la peinture canadienne qu'un critique anglais, commentant un rapport de la section canadienne de "The Colonial and Indian Exhibition", tenue à Londres en 1886, écrit: "J'aimerais voir la peinture canadienne, canadienne jusqu'à la moelle."

These canvases mark the introduction of another European impulse—impressionism, with its emphasis on light and colour. The painters found in it an approach that seemed to them particularly adaptable to a better representation of the Canadian landscape.

Ici se manifeste au Canada pour la première fois une autre influence européenne: l'impressionnisme qui fait vibrer la lumière en divisant la couleur. Quelques peintres trouvent ce procédé particulièrement apte à mieux rendre le paysage canadien.

ATFER the turn of the century, Canadian painters became increasingly aware of Paris as a world centre of art. If they studied there, they came into contact with impressionism and succeeding movements; even if they did not, they saw in the new art magazines, some illustrated for the first time in colour, the accomplishments of Paris and the rest of the world. As a result, the tendency to experiment was intensified but the general public when confronted with the paintings in exhibitions, regarded them with misgivings.

In commissioning some of its War Records of 1914-1918 from these artists, the government made a move towards recognizing them. This public recognition had an influence on later developments.

In this period, too, provincial governments, notably that of Quebec, began to set up institutions for art education with the building of art schools and museums, the granting of scholarships and the holding of exhibitions.

APRES le début du siècle, nos artistes s'éprennent de plus en plus de Paris comme centre mondial d'éducation artistique. S'ils peuvent s'y rendre, ils prennent contact avec l'impressionnisme et les autres mouvements qui le suivent; et même s'ils ne peuvent pas s'y rendre, ils voient dans les nouvelles revues d'art, copieusement illustrées, quelques unes en couleur pour la première fois, se déployer devant eux les dernières trouvailles de Paris et du reste du monde. Comme résultante, le goût de la recherche s'intensifie.

Le public, toutefois, regarde avec étonnement ces formules nouvelles lorsqu'il les voit exposées; cependant, le Gouvernement Canadien reconnaît la valeur de ces artistes dont quelques uns deviennent les historiographes de la guerre 1914-1918, et cet endossement officiel stimule le développement de la peinture au pays.

Dans cette période également, les gouvernements provinciaux établissent des institutions pour l'enseignement des Beaux-Arts, notamment le Gouvernement de la Province de Québec, avec la construction d'Ecoles des Beaux-Arts et de musées, dépensant chaque année des sommes considérables pour leur entretien, de même que pour l'octroi de bourses, l'acquisition d'oeuvres nouvelles et la tenue d'expositions.

These men, for the most part members of the Royal Canadian Academy, did not carry on academic traditions unchanged. Within this group there exists a variety of personal manners much greater than in earlier periods. Meticulous naturalism yields to new interests—a richer texture and a more poetic approach.

Ces artistes, membres pour la plupart de la Royal Canadian Academy, ne poursuivent pas cependant la tradition académique sans la modifier. On rencontre dans ce groupe une variété de caractéristiques particulières beaucoup plus grandes que dans les périodes antérieures. La représentation méticuleuse fait place à de nouvelles tendances—coloris plus riche, compréhension plus poétique.

The paintings in this group consist of the later work of some artists shown previously and of the earlier work of some younger men. All of it exhibits in varying degrees the impact of impressionism, post-impressionism and other contemporary European movements. The interest in light and colour is more pronounced, while a sense of pattern is also developing.

Dans ce groupe se rencontrent les œuvres plus tardives d'artistes représentés précédemment, ainsi que les premiers travaux d'artistes plus jeunes. Et tout indique ici à des degrés divers, l'influence de l'impressionnisme, du post-impressionnisme et des autres mouvements européens contemporains. L'intérêt de lumière et de couleur est plus prononcé, tandis que se développe largement le sens décoratif.

During the period of the Great War a group of painters emerged who regarded the academic tradition as inadequate and sought a stronger means of expressing their deep affection for Canada. Broad decorative patterns composed of rich colours characterized the work of these men, who, except for Thomson who died in 1917, formed the Group of Seven in 1919. This was a most distinctive and widely influential movement in Canadian art.

Au cours de la Grande Guerre surgit un groupe de peintres qui, trouvant la tradition académique insuffisante, cherchent à exprimer leur affection profonde pour la terre canadienne en des termes plus vigoureux. Une composition décorative large, au coloris riche, marque le travail de ces hommes qui, à l'exception de Thomson, mort en 1917, forment en 1919 le Groupe des Sept dont le mouvement distinctif a exercé une certaine influence sur l'art canadien jusqu'à nos jours.

VI

WHILE Canada had now acquired a new and stronger sense of national consciousness, the aftermath of the war was inevitably a period of readjustment. Although there was a great demand for painters as teachers, as illustrators and designers in commercial studios, they found like other people that conditions had not changed for the better. For, while their value was recognized by a limited number of private individuals and by art galleries and museums, through purchases and exhibitions which attracted increasing attention, there was scarcely any general demand for their painting.

This was true not only for painters, as it was for sculptors and for architects—in fact for all those whose special talent was the building of an environment which sheltered, reflected and expressed the ideas of their civilization. This was as true for the whole western world as it was for Canada. During the nineteen-thirties, this tendency was modified by a marked increase in the desire throughout the country to see and study Canadian painting.

But if society for a time appeared to disregard them as painters, that did not quench their ardour for painting. On the contrary, they painted for themselves and for their friends, experimenting with everything. This is, of course, not the case with all painters, but it is with enough of them to make this experimental, and in the best sense, irrepressible activity the outstanding characteristic of the painting of our time.

It is significant that in the late thirties, the purchase of contemporary pictures by private individuals began to increase and continues to do so.

LE Canada sort donc de la guerre mondiale avec un sentiment nouveau et plus fort de sa valeur nationale, mais il doit faire face à une période de réadaptation.

Il existe, il est vrai, une certaine demande pour les peintres comme professeurs, ou comme dessinateurs ou illustrateurs dans l'art commercial, mais pour eux aussi les conditions ne sont pas toujours changées pour le mieux. Sans doute, un nombre restreint de collectionneurs, de même que les galeries et les musées, reconnaissent leur valeur par des achats ou des expositions, mais le grand public reste plutôt indifférent. Et c'est partout la même chose, tant au Canada que dans tout le monde occidental.

Non seulement pour les peintres, mais aussi pour les sculpteurs et les architectes—au fait—pour tous ceux-là qui ont reçu pour mission d'exprimer, de garder ou de refléter l'idéal de la civilisation. Mais vers les 1930, cette tendance se modifie par un intérêt grandissant et marqué du désir de voir et d'étudier la peinture canadienne.

Si la société—pour un temps—semble négliger les artistes, ce délaissement passager n'étouffe en rien leur désir de peindre. Bien au contraire. Ils travaillent maintenant pour eux-mêmes et pour leurs amis plus volontairement que jamais; et ils expérimentent de toutes les manières. Ceci, sans doute, ne s'applique pas à tous les peintres, mais à un assez grand nombre d'entre eux toutefois, pour que cette période d'activité expérimentale, irrépressible dans le meilleur sens du mot, soit la caractéristique de la peinture de notre temps.

Et il est fort significatif de constater que depuis cette époque, l'acquisition de peintures contemporaines par des particuliers, s'accentue et se continue.

Sec. VI—1

The tendency to pattern is here fully expressed. This is the style of the Group of Seven in its developed phase. To quote C. Lewis Hind in Landscape Painting (1924) referring to Canadian pictures in the British Empire Exhibition, "There they were, bold decorative landscapes, emphasizing colour, line and pattern, giving the very look and feel of Canada . . . young artists painting a young country superbly, through their temperaments, not literally . . ."

In 1927 the French Government invited a similar Canadian exhibition to Paris, evidence of growing recognition abroad. Since that time exhibitions of Canadian painting have travelled widely outside the country.

La tendance décorative s'exprime pleinement ici. C'est la phase du développement du Groupe des Sept. Comme le dit C. Lewis Hind, dans Landscape Painting (1924) au sujet de l'Exposition Canadienne à Wembley lors de la "British Empire Exhibition": . . . "Voici du paysage décoratif, une peinture vigoureuse qui accentue la ligne et la couleur . . . hardie . . . véritablement canadienne de ton et de sentiment . . . jeunes artistes qui peignent avec sensibilité et non pas littéralement, un jeune pays . . ."

Et sous le haut patronage du Gouvernement de la République Française, une exposition semblable se tient à Paris en 1927, indice d'un intérêt grandissant en Europe. Depuis, des expositions de peinture canadienne circulent largement au dehors du pays.

Hind's remarks also apply to the work of these men, as does a criticism in "Le Temps", Paris, in 1927. ". . . another school of young artists shows the same enthusiasm but treats in an essentially different manner the more picturesque aspects of the country . . . The fleeting grace of sunlight on snow, the rich and velvety colouring of autumn, the movement and life of the villages . . . inspires more pleasing themes, fresher tones and assures a delicate and intelligent execution."

Their paintings are differentiated by their choice of subject matter, their less emphatic design and more fluid handling of paint.

L'opinion de Hind s'applique également à l'oeuvre de ces artistes, de même que la critique parue dans "Le Temps" de Paris, en 1927:

... "une autre école de jeunes . . . traduit avec le même enthousiasme, mais sous une forme essentiellement différente, les aspects les plus pittoresques du pays . . . Les grâces légères d'un coup de soleil sur la neige, les colorations riches et veloutées de l'automne, le mouvement et la vie des villages abrités . . . inspirent des motifs plus plaisants, plus frais de tons et d'une exécution spirituelle et fine" . . .

Leurs travaux se distinguent par le choix du sujet, et par un métier plus fluide, au dessin moins accentué.

Here the dominant decorative pattern is maintained, but whereas its originators worked closely together, these painters were widely scattered. Their style is more varied and in many cases their subject matter is different and painted with a different emphasis.

Ici le caractère décoratif dominant se maintient, mais alors que ses initiateurs travaillaient plutôt de concert, ceux-ci sont largement dispersés. Le style est plus varié, et, dans bien des cas, la matière du sujet à peindre est aussi différente que le métier en est différent.

Other trends, some of which are international, now broaden the scope of Canadian painting. These trends range from regionalism, where emphasis is laid on the inherent picturesqueness of certain localities and types of people, to expressionism or the distortion of form and colour of natural objects to achieve an emotional or aesthetic effect, and to abstract or purely subjective painting in which no attempt is made to represent objects in the outside world. To illustrate the increasing variety of handling and diversity of viewpoints, the paintings in this group are arranged according to subject matter.

D'autres influences, soit particulières ou internationales viennent maintenant animer l'essor de la peinture canadienne. Ces influences s'étendent du régionalisme, dont le caractère porte sur l'accent purement pittoresque de certains paysages et de types humains, à la déformation systématique et l'emploi arbitraire de la couleur, afin de créer un choc purement esthétique; enfin à la pure abstraction—c'est-à-dire à la peinture nettement subjective—dans laquelle la représentation des objets et du monde extérieur ne compte vraiment pour rien.

Pour illustrer une telle variété de technique et tant de points de vue différents, les peintures se groupent ici dans l'ordre des sujets.

ABSTRACT COMPOSITION

W. C. and pen 13½ x 19-s.d. 1944
Art Association of Montreal.

IT had been hoped to include some of the paintings of the official war artists, both at home and abroad, in this exhibition. Circumstances, however, combined to make this impossible, and this is to be regretted because the work of these men and women is another indication of the growing stature of the artist in Canadian society.

LES circonstances, malheureusement, ne permettent pas de montrer ici quelques unes des œuvres de guerre des peintres officiels, soit au pays ou outre-mer. Le fait est regrettable, car l'œuvre de ces peintres, hommes ou femmes, est un indice de la place grandissante qu'occupe l'artiste dans la société canadienne.
