Toy-testers and other experts say the key to choosing toys is knowing your child's interests and abilities.

Choosing Toys Is Not C

By Kirsten A. Conover

Staff writer of The Christian Science Monitor

LITTLE Johnny has just presented you with his carefully printed holiday wish list: It's as long as a jump rope. If only it were that simple.

Such lists underscore a challenge parents face this time of year: how to surprise children with engaging, long-lasting gifts without surrendering completely to commercialism — or draining the family savings account.
